

David L. White – Bio

David White has held the position of Chief Information Officer since February 2012. He and his team are responsible for strategically aligning and advancing corporate application development, infrastructure platforms, and development initiatives across the enterprise. A key component of this position entails leveraging new and emerging trends and concepts to more cost effectively provide business solutions. David has held various executive level positions with the state of Ohio including Executive Program Manager of the Ohio Administrative Knowledge System, Director of State Accounting within the Office of Budget and Management, and Director of Revenue Management within the State of Ohio Treasury. He is a member of the CIO Advisory Board for Box.com, the advisory board of the Columbus African American Leadership Academy, a board observer with the Columbus Collaboratory, and a member of the COSI Community Board. David attended the Ohio State University where he studied electrical engineering, Columbus State Community College receiving a degree in business administration, and Franklin University receiving a degree in computer management.

